Privacy of Personal Information

The privacy of personal information is important to the Personal Injury Commission. The Commission collects personal information to register application forms and make decisions about disputes or claims. The NSW motor accident laws permit the Commission to collect this information.

The Commission may give personal information to another person or agency (e.g. a doctor, a party, State Insurance Regulatory Authority) as required or authorised by law.

Decisions by the Commission will be published, including on the Internet. The Commission may, of their own motion or on the application of a relevant person, de-identify or redact a publishable decision, unless there are exceptional circumstances justifying the decision being withheld.

A person has a right to access their personal information and correct any inaccuracies.
